

The Journal Impact Factor is the average number of citations that a journal receives in a given year (e.g., 2014) for articles published over the previous two year period (in this example, 2012-2013).

The Journal Impact Factor is calculated yearly for journals indexed in Web of Science and is published in Journal Citation Reports.